SENATOR WHITNEY: Well, if we ever have an attraction out there at Chappel, people can see the sign on the right-of-way because it still would be only relative a few feet away. And I feel that this amendment should be accepted. The purpose of the highway is to make it possible for a person to drive safely from one point to another, and you have literature in your car, at least I do when I drive to New York City, I have literature there. I watch the maps and see what the excellent sites there are to see, and we drive off to see them. And if this has pilot project in Nebraska, and then every state in the union is going to come along and want this, it's going to create hazards throughout the whole United States. And if more than ever then I feel that these signs should be out on the edge rather than close up and to mow the weeds around those signs, that's an expense. I think the expense would be less to have the signs over by the fence than to have them so close to the highway that they have to keep mowing the weeds, and even then they won't get them all mowed down. And as a consequence the snow would go onto the road as a result of windbreak caused by the weeds around these signs as they are now. I think it presents a hazard.
